What Canada has to do with the Treaty of Washington.

Our Ottawa correspondent who is well informed in political affairs at the Seat of Government, intimates in his last letter the probability of the early meeting of the Dominion Parliament to make provision by repealing certain laws and enacting others for carrying into operation those sections of the Treaty of Washington that affect Canada. If such should be the case there is every probability that British Columbia members will be present at that session. There seems to be no doubt but we shall be admitted into the Dominion by the first of August at the latest. The registration of voters will be completed some time in August or not later than the first of September, if reasonable diligence be shown by the Registrars. In that case the elections should come off about the first of October. So if the Dominion Parliament should not meet before November, there would be ample time for our delegation to be present. There does not appear to be anything in the treaty requiring much haste in summoning Parliament, as there is a survey clause over its provisions waiting us in arriving at a conclusion; for the provisions of the Treaty affecting Canada don't go into operation until suitable legislation has been made to make them operative. There may, however, be good reasons that do not appear plainly on the surface, that make the early decision of the Parliament of Canada on the subject desirable. But whether Parliament may be summoned next fall or at the usual time, there seems to be no doubt but we will be represented there. We may consequently just as well pass in review the work in connection with the Treaty that we, as an integral portion of the Dominion, will have to take part in. By the Treaty of 1818, the United States obtained for its fishermen the right of taking, curing and drying fish on certain portions of the coast of the Eastern Provinces. Now, whilst that right by Article 10 of the Treaty of Washington is retained, the additional privilege is proposed to be granted to American citizens of taking and curing fish on all parts of the coast of Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward's Island, without prejudice to private rights, for a term of ten years, subject to be terminated at that time, or any time afterwards, by giving two years' notice. The new fishing privileges are to be confined solely to the fisheries, and the salmon, and all river fisheries are not to be touched by the Americans. In Article 19, a similar fishing privilege is accorded to all British subjects, Canadian included, on the coast of the United States from the 39th parallel to St. Croix river, at the eastern end of Maine. Article 20 allows all the fish oil, and fish of all kinds of Canada to enter the United States duty free during the term of ten years, and afterwards till the fishery provisions of the Treaty may be abrogated by the two years' notice. So far, then, all that the Dominion would gain by giving up the shores everywhere to American fishermen, would be the right to fish on the coast of the United States about five degrees of latitude, and to carry their fish into the United States duty free. These privileges are a sufficient return for those granted. The Americans maintained that they were. So in Article 22 it is provided that a Commission shall be appointed to say how much compensation, if any, shall be paid to Canada, and whatever sum of money it may award, shall be paid by the United States to Canada. But that sum shall be a "payment" in full for the ten years' privilege. Now, at the present time, American fishermen are allowed to fish on the coast of the Dominion, by taking out a license. Hence it strikes one that if a money consideration were paid for the whole period, it would answer much better than an annual license. But some doubts whether the Commissioners will award a money consideration at all. Consequently there steps in the difficulty. We think that there is scarcely a doubt but as award will be given. Hence looking at the matter from our standpoint, aside from the local party feeling of the Eastern Provinces, the fishing provisions of the Treaty seem to be founded on just principles, and appear to be calculated to set at rest for some years to come the interminable fishing squabbles of the Atlantic Coast. If there is a superabundance of fish around the shores of the Eastern Provinces, more than their fishermen can take and cure, why should not the United States or any friendly power be allowed to utilize them? The only thing is to secure an adequate consideration for the fishing privileges granted. By the treaty point in the Treaty, the navigation of the St. Lawrence, the Ste. Jean, and Potomac, is made free and open forever, subject to any laws enacted by Canada and the United States. Hence the Dominion Parliament will have to settle under what regulations American vessels may go up and down the St. Lawrence—a mere boggy. Whether the Americans shall use the "Welland, St. Lawrence, and other canals," is another question that the Dominion Parliament will have to decide upon, and as it has not produced any entry in Canada, we presume there will be no trouble in arranging that matter. Beyond giving the free navigation of Lake Michigan for ten years, there is not, however, any return for granting to Americans the privileges of passing through Canadian canals, except the possible reciprocal use of State canals. Some regulation may be required under Article 29, respecting goods in transit from one American to one Canadian port, and vice versa; but that is an easy matter, if it is not already practically settled. Article 30 gives to Canadian vessels the right to carry, without paying duties, merchandise from one American port to another, in the St. Lawrence and Great Lakes, for ten years, provided that a portion of the transportation is made by land carriage or in bond. The Americans are to enjoy similar privileges on the Canadian side, if any portion of the merchandise has to be carried by land on the American side. The advantages of this article, then, seem to be reciprocal, and Canada will doubtless make all the necessary legislation to free shipping and trade along the boundary from existing restrictions. But for some reason or another, the Americans seem to think that their lake and river coasting trade is worth more to Canada than they are likely to get in return. So they insist that all export duties on lumber or timber cut in Maine and floated down the St. John river and shipped to the States shall be removed within a year, or else the coasting trade shall not be thrown open. This provision will entail compensation to New Brunswick, for who has the exclusive right to enforce export duties on lumber. It may also be necessary to alter the Canadian tariff in order to remove the export duty on such American lumber. Hence, with the exception of the fishery question, there don't seem to be any very serious matter for the Dominion Parliament to settle. The temper of the people and the tactics of the Opposition are, however, likely to cause the present administration some difficulty. British Columbia candidates for the Dominion Parliament are not likely, however to lose many votes, no matter what view they may take of the subject; but we cannot well see how they can vote against the present administration on the Fishery question.
